Authors retain the following permissions, provided that proper citation is included:

1. If mandated by the research funder, authors may deposit the accepted, un-copyedited version of the manuscript into PubMed Central, with an embargo period (time at which the manuscript is available to the public) of twelve months after publication. This right applies solely to deposition into PubMed Central; the authors agree not to deposit the manuscript to any other agency or entity. Authors whose funder mandates a PubMed Central embargo of six months are permitted to make the manuscript available at six months after publication. This right applies only to articles under a funder mandate to submit to PubMed Central.

2. Authors are permitted to reuse original figures or tables from their own work. This permission extends to the author only, not to the institution.

3. Authors are permitted to include the final, published version of the article in a thesis and/or dissertation in print. If required by the degree-conferring institution, an electronic version of the final, published version may be deposited into a thesis repository, provided a link to the article on the Immune Network website is included.

4. Authors are permitted to reprint the article in print collections composed solely of the author’s own writings. Permission must be obtained from KAI to reprint the article in any publication that includes the work of others.

5. Authors are permitted to post a copy of the accepted, un-copyedited version on the author’s personal website with the following statement: “This is the accepted, un-copyedited version of the manuscript. The definitive version was published in Immune Network Vol: pp-pp. DOI.” A hyperlink to the published article on the Immune Network website must be included; the published PDF may not be displayed. For posting on any other websites, including any social media, corporate, or government (other than PubMed Central according to the terms in item 1 above) website, permission must be requested from KAI. Posting to institutional repositories is not permitted.

6. Authors are permitted to present their work orally in part or in its entirety.

7. If the work was prepared as a work-for-hire, the author’s employer may print out PDFs or make photocopies for internal use only. Distribution of the article by the author’s employer in other formats or for any other purpose requires permission from KAI.
